I. Who do you admire most and why? The subject of your essay can be from any time period and can be someone you know personally or someone you have never actually met. What characteristics have led you to admire this person? How do you embody those same traits in your own life?

II. In Khaled Hosseini's novel The Kite Runner, Baba (the father of the narrator) attempts to convince his son "there is only one sin, only one. And that is theft. Every other sin is a variation of theft." Write an essay examining this idea that every sin can be perceived as theft or a variation of theft. What are the implications of this claim that all sins are some form of theft? What might be the value or benefits of everyone adopting this understanding of sin? How does Baba's statement match with your own ideas of sin?
